GIVES GEORGE A CHANCE.

Court Is Ensy on Namesake of Father of Country.

"George Washington," said the clerk of the Juvenile Court yesterday aftermon, laying down his ponderous pen, and passing a nensupport information to the marshal, "George Washington," should the marshal, "George Washington, about the marshal, in the court room of curious people gaped in amazement.

Every eye was riveted on the court room door, in a moment the tread of the marshal was heard outside. And there was the tread of another person.

Every eye was riveted on the court room door, in a moment the tread of the marshal was heard outside. And there was the tread of another person, too, it was George Washington. Everybody wanted to see George Washington—the father of the country. The marshal stepped in and with him George Washington, defendant, a colored cost thoyeler.

shoveler.

George Washington had been arraigned before the iribinal previously on a charge of nonsupport, and had been ordered to pay 35 a week for the support of his children. But George had broken his promise, and when he faced Judge De Lacy yesterday he was $25.55 in default. George Washington promised that he would meet his obligations in the future as the course.
